

dwyl Freelance Agreement

You are invited to join us as a freelance contributor of dwyl - the app that helps you do what you love!

This agreement has been crafted to clarify several questions we have been asked by potential contributors to the project(s).

In short: What you contribute is your own work. You can still keep using it for anything you like and once it's part of dwyl's repositories, so can we. Remember that all our code is open source so other people can use it too!.

Why have this agreement?

This agreement is for your peace of mind as a contributor (we want to make sure you have no doubts about what will happen to your contribution) as well as for the protection of dwyl Ltd. (dwyl) and others using the codebase.

We request that you either physically or electronically sign (a printed or digital version respectively of) this agreement and return it to Inês @dwyl before committing any code to the project.

What are we agreeing to?

As an individual contributor, you are contributing original works of code to the open source codebase ("the codebase") which forms the "dwyl app", maintained by dwyl Ltd. and hosted on GitHub at: <https://github.com/dwyl>

As a contributor, you hereby agree that:

1. The contributions you make to the codebase are your original work (never copied from somewhere else);
2. By committing your code into a dwyl-owned repository, you grant worldwide, and irrevocable but non-exclusive copyright with no further consideration to dwyl;
3. This is an open source project, so in addition to dwyl using your (and all of our) contributions, the codebase may also be used by other people (3rd parties) without further consent or consideration;
4. Your contribution does not grant you a claim to any earnings (past, present or future) of dwyl or any other individuals or companies that use your code;
5. You will follow the dwyl code of conduct;
6. Your contribution will only be considered complete and ready for review when it has met the conditions set out in dwyl's definition of done;

7. You do not have any obligation to provide support for your code, however you are encouraged to remain a contributor/supporter for as long you find it personally beneficial/rewarding;
8. If you use the original works you contribute to the dwyl codebase in future projects we ask that you provide attribution back to the project where you originally made the contribution;
9. You are fully responsible for your own health and safety.

We (dwyl) agree to the following:

- I. We will ensure that you are listed as a contributor wherever your original work has been used; there will be a permanent record on Github but should you choose to exclude yourself from the list of contributors on the dwyl website (where we will add a link to your preferred online profile), please notify us by raising an issue on: <https://github.com/dwyl/dwyl.github.io/issues>
- II. You can use your contribution for any other purpose including other open source projects, provided you communicate clearly with the owners/maintainers of those projects where/when you produced the "original work" and provide attribution to that effect.

- You will track your working time meticulously against a specific pre-agreed and estimated task; time not logged against a specific task is considered "personal learning/leisure time" and is not chargeable to dwyl If in doubt, ask!
